COULD PLACE-BASED GIVING SCHEMES HELP COMMUNITIES FEEL MORE CONNECTED?

A strong sense of community is lacking for many people in the UK

Fewer than three in ten (28%) agree that there is a strong sense of community where they live

But there is nevertheless a desire to donate to local causes

Nearly half (47%) of people like to donate to local causes and most (61%) say they like to see the impact of their donations

Place-based giving could help communities feel more connected

Nearly half of people (46%) agree that place-based giving schemes would help people to feel more connected to their local areas and around four in ten say they are a good way to help communities thrive

Respondents were asked questions about place-based giving which was described as follows: "where local residents give into a central fund that is then distributed to a range of charities and communities organisations working to meet the needs of the area."
