Nearly half of people (46%) think that charities play an important part in the climate change debate. This rises to 59% among young people.

Individuals are seen as the most effective at leading the debate...

Fewer people think that international bodies, charities, government and businesses most effectively lead the debate.

Charities, international bodies, governments and businesses need to get better at expressing how they're helping to tackle one of the defining issues of our age.